Colonic pathologies in Irish patients referred for endoscopic colonic biopsy. Endoscopic biopsy of the colon is the recommended method of obtaining tissue for histological analysis in gastrointestinal disease. A majority of colorectal biopsies performed in Ireland are taken from the recto-sigmoid junction. Our aims were to determine the use of biopsy in Ireland, the distribution of colonic pathology and the rate of diagnostic errors. Data were obtained for the years 2004-2006 from the Office of National Statistics on inpatients and outpatients referrals for endoscopy of the GI tract. Discharge diagnoses were coded using the version of ICD10 available in 2006. The yearly incidence of biopsy of the colon was 12 per 10(5) total GI admissions. This increased by 9% per annum (p Results from first family of 'smart glasses' - gsibble
